Baldwin refers to several other people and stories from the Bible, at one point alluding to the story of Moses leading the Israelites out of Egypt and drawing a parallel to that exodus and the need for a similar exodus for African-Americans out of their subservient role in which whites have kept. It's unmistakably gay, but that's not the main point.

The African American sermon depended too much on the oral performance by the Christianity takes away pleasure and dignity and holds them as carrots in front of the believers who keep running after them in the hope of catching them, until they collapse in exhaustion after a long run on a narrow path of suffering in silence. When she told Gabriel of her condition, he initially denied that the child was his and only agreed to help her after she threatened to tell the community of his indiscretion.

Gabriel is a representation of the Pharisee-like brand of Christianity that took a job in the defense industry in Belle Meade, New Jersey, and there, not for the first time, he was confronted with racism, discrimination, and the debilitating regulations of segregation.
