Consider the following questions: How am I feeling about myself as a coach right now? How can I improve my business? How can I improve my practice? How can I improve my life? How can I improve my relationships? How can I improve my health? How can I improve my finances? How can I improve my skills? How can I improve my knowledge? How can I improve my character? How can I improve my faith? How can I improve my love? How can I improve my hope? How can I improve my joy? How can I improve my peace? How can I improve my happiness? How can I improve my success? How can I improve my fulfillment? How can I improve my meaning? How can I improve my purpose? How can I improve my destiny? How can I improve my future? How can I improve my legacy? How can I improve my impact? How can I improve my influence? How can I improve my legacy? How can I improve my impact? How can I improve my influence?

Assume one with a business background, I thought I was philosophically comfortable with my former profession, but I was not. I was not comfortable with the inner and outer critics who doubt the viability of my dream? You may feel comfortable and masterful in your former profession, but tentative and uncertain of your skills and value as a new coach.
