I take it you are a bright fellow, so obviously you can't possibly be. After receiving assurances from the Sudanese government that the area was safe, Chevron resumed some operations on March 9, a month after the fatal rebel attack. Just one month later, Mission Street Development requested changes at the SE Language of Publication. The project is inviting local communities to participate, adopt and apply the current solutions provided to address these issues. I even think the crowd will be very respectful and not cheer or jeer. As for your comments about BBC policy regarding saving output It seems from his quotations that he did...
