The second movement famously consists of two simple chords, to which Hanneke has improvised a very simple decoration from the harpsichord. His contributions to this genre include: regular use of ritornello form tutti theme alternating with solo episodes in the fast outer movements, new virtuosic standards for soloists, new strong effects, such as orchestral unison. Bach himself, for example, would undoubtedly have been the harpsichord soloist. Published in as part of a larger set Il cimento dell'armonia e dell'inventione, Op. This concert features pieces of musical conversations, primarily various types of Baroque concertos, but begins with a conversation of a different type, a different age, and from a different genre the musical stage. This gives the work the character of a French suite, something which would doubtless have flattered the Francophile tastes of the Margrave. Christian Ludwig von Brandenburg resided at the Royal court in Berlin and mainly horns play a particularly striking role.
